Archival History/ Source of Acquisition

The collection was created after the death of John Tate (04 November 1787) upon the establishment of John Tate's Charity. The collection has been the property of the Board of Trustees of John Tate's Charity and donated to Wicklow County Council Archives in 2012.

Biographical History

John Tate was born in 1754, in the parish of Rathdrum. His parents, James Tate (1693-1774) and Anne Hornidge (1710-1790) were married in Dublin on 27 April 1734.¹ Both the Tates and Hornidges came from well-established families of prosperous farmers, and on the path to a higher social status.² The Hornridge family arrived in Ireland during the Cromwellian settlements. The Tate family made a name for themselves in trade and business and then began buying land to establish themselves as farmers becoming self-made members of the Irish gentry. John Tate's sister, Anne, married a local gentleman from the parish, Abraham Critchley, who was a first cousin of the bride through the Hornidge family. Abraham was the son of John Critchley of Derrybawn, Co Wicklow. The heir to multiple properties, Abraham was a prosperous rural gentleman going up in the world - making him the ideal candidate for intermarriage with the Tates.³

After his father's death, John Tate at the age of 20 years old became the heir to the family seat at Fananierin. John Tate managed to accumulate an impressive personal fortune through his landed interests, becoming a major player on the local scene by his early 20s. Before reaching the age of 30, Tate had long since become a pillar of the middling gentry families that dominated Wicklow's political landscape. Indeed, most of his time on earth appears to have been devoted to forging firm friendships with the local notables of the wider parish, with whom he often conducted business on various land ventures.⁴

Strongly attached to Rathdrum Parish Church, between 1775-6 he acted as a churchwarden to the town's Anglican congregation, frequently attended by the insular world of petty gentry families he served alongside. In a bid to gain administrative experience, John also put himself forward several terms as a parish councillor, in 1774, 1778-9, and 1780. While serving as a parish councillor in 1778, he was appointed a member and applotter of the Wicklow Grand Jury, responsible for collecting tithes in his home barony of Ballinacor.⁵

Tate never married, or produced a legitimate heir, his family life was highly unconventional by the standards of the day. John fathered two sons out of wedlock, with two separate women and provided for them in his will – see below. Unusually, both children carried the father's surname. Although such behaviour would have been considered a grave moral offence in the 1780s, John never shied away from fully acknowledging his parentage, and appeared at the baptisms of each child. As a matter of fact, both children were aptly provided for in his will, ensuring that they would grow up largely free from the social stigma of illegitimacy. However, following their respective births - John never again got the opportunity to serve as a churchwarden or parish councillor in his local place of worship.⁶

On 26 August 1781, Rathdrum Parish registry recorded the baptism of Abraham Tate, whose mother is listed as Martha Hornidge Bryan - most likely a cousin of the recognised father.⁷ On 14 January 1784, the same registry listed the baptism of a John Tate Junior. For this latest arrival, the mother's name was given as Catherine Wybrants, the daughter of a prominent family with Dutch mercantile origins. Once again, Tate was registered as the child's father at the ceremony.⁸ However, his relations with the local Anglican Ministry were seemingly unaffected by what must have been the scandalous talk of the town, as all evidence suggests that John still enjoyed a warm friendship with the incumbent Reverends of Rathdrum Parish.⁹

Tate wrote his Will on 07 October 1787, less than a month before his passing – giving reason to believe he was already suffering an advanced stage of illness when the Will was drafted. John appointed Abraham Critchley as the sole executor to his will. John Tate vested the profits from his land of 895 acres of Cullentragh to the local community of the Parish of Rathdrum. Tate instructed to “apply the profits thereof to the use of the Industrious [hard-working] poor of the said Parish of Rathdrum.” By “lending out small sums of money not exceeding £5 to any one-person interest free to be paid in such a manner and at such times not exceeding 12 months.” In exceptional circumstances, like in cases of “sickness or some unforeseen misfortune or sudden emergency happening to any of the poor of the said parish”, or when dealing with “aged or infirm persons, or when there is a family of five children and upwards whose parents or themselves are unable by their labour to provide a sufficient support.” Tate mentioned that “differences in religious principles shall not preclude any person from receiving benefit from this charity.” the only discriminating from availing of the Trust is that one must live in the Parish of Rathdrum for more than three years. “Strolling beggars who shall go from Parish to Parish to beg” would not be entitled to “relief from my said Trustees”. Membership of the Board of Trustees was specified to ensure only “fit and discrete” persons were eligible. All potential trustees must own “a freehold of the clear yearly value of £100, or of personal property of £1000.” For this property qualification, the household ought to be located in Rathdrum itself, or in a directly adjoining parish. Meetings were required to take place at least “once every month at least in some convenient part of said parish”, and if a member failed to appear at least four times annually, their status as trustee would automatically be “considered vacant and a new trustee elected”. There are to be five members, one of whom would always be “the resident officiating Protestant clergyman [of Rathdrum Parish Church]”, while the others would be elected among the resident parishioners following a “public written notice”.¹⁰

Tate also made sure to make adequate provision for his surviving relations. His elderly widowed mother, Anne Tate, who was still alive at the time of John’s death, was granted £1000 from the personal family fortune. Meanwhile, the first-born son, Abraham, was bestowed £100 per year from the Cullentragh rents for the duration of his minority. Upon reaching 21 years old, Abraham was to receive ownership rights of “said lands [Cullentragh] with lease thereof and all papers and writings anyway relating to or concerning the same.” Through this ingenious legal manoeuvre, it seems John intended to circumvent the law that forbade illegitimate sons from inheriting property holdings. Key to this effort, was the appointment of Thomas King as “guardian of the person and property of the said Abraham Tate” - a clear sign of the strong bonds between the two men. Indeed, Tate held King in such high regard, that he also gifted £100 “as a mark of my friendship.”¹¹

The younger son, John Junior, was also well catered for, with instructions to provide the boy with £10 per year for “his maintenance and schooling until he shall be of sufficient age to be put an apprentice and £30 as an apprentice fee”, followed by a one-off payment of £200 upon completion of his training. Finally, John’s sister, Anne Chritchley, received “all the rest residue and the remainder of my worldly substance of every nature and kind, subject nevertheless to the payment of my just debts [and] the several legacies before mentioned and my funeral expenses.”¹²

Content and Structure

The collection contains many important papers dating back to 1762. These include the impressive A1 sized will of John Tate, original leases, bonds and minute books of the John Tate Charity. The collection has been catalogued chronologically and papers divided out into easy researchable categories.

The collection will be of interest to those not only interested in the John Tate Charity, but also to those researching the history of the Rathdrum parish. The collection contains the names of locals who availed of the Trust and the local shops that would have been used by the Clothing Club. The minute books also give an invaluable insight as to the events at that time. It is worth noting that the minute books for the period of the Great Famine in Ireland is not included in the collection. Two Minute books are dated 1803 to 1840 and 1867-1909, leaving a period of great death and distress unaccounted. The 1867-1909 Minute book contains entries for when Charles Stewart Parnell was a member of the Board of Trustees.

Scope and Content

The collection houses original Wills, leases, Minute Books, High Court Papers and Account Books for the Charity established under John Tate.

System of Arrangement

Documents are arranged from fonds to item level description.

Collection description adheres to ISAD(G).

A Will of John Tate

1/1 1787

Large parchment of the original Will and codicil of John Tate of Fannaneering, Glenmalure, Co. Wicklow. John Tate vested the profits from his land of 895 acres of Cullentragh to the local community of the Parish of Rathdrum. The sole executor appointed was Abraham Critchley. Tate instructed to “apply the profits thereof to the use of the Industrious [hard-working] poor of the said Parish of Rathdrum.” By “lending out small sums of money not exceeding £5 to any one-person interest free to be paid in such a manner and at such times not exceeding 12 months.” In exceptional circumstances, like in cases of “sickness or some unforeseen misfortune or sudden emergency happening to any of the poor of the said parish”, or when dealing with “aged or infirm persons, or when there is a family of five children and upwards whose parents or themselves are unable by their labour to provide a sufficient support.” Tate mentioned that “differences in religious principles shall not preclude any person from receiving benefit from this charity.” the only discriminating from availing of the Trust is that one must live in the Parish of Rathdrum for more than three years. “Strolling beggars who shall go from Parish to Parish to beg” would not be entitled to “relief from my said Trustees”. Membership of the Board of Trustees was specified to ensure only “fit and discrete” persons were eligible. All potential trustees must own “a freehold of the clear yearly value of £100, or of personal property of £1000.” For this property qualification, the household ought to be located in Rathdrum itself, or in a directly adjoining parish. Meetings were required to take place at least “once every month at least in some convenient part of said parish”, and if a member failed to appear at least four times annually, their status as trustee would automatically be “considered vacant and a new trustee elected”. There are to be five members, one of whom would always be “the resident officiating Protestant clergyman [of Rathdrum Parish Church]”, while the others would be elected among the resident parishioners following a “public written notice”.
