Letter 5th June 1855, From Com^r of National Education forwarding the following extracts from their school inspectors report relative to his visit to the workhouse schools on the 3rd ult.

The Literary acquirements of the teachers Thomas Douse & Mary Carter are tolerable and they conduct the business of their respective schools in an intelligent and painstaking manner.

Boys School

Comprises properly speaking two distinct schools namely one in the morning from 10 till 12 (or dinner time) in which the junior classes receive instruction. The other which may be called the Evening school is for the more grown boys who are engaged with agricultural or indoor work during the early part of the day. This is an excellent arrangement as it enables the teacher to introduce some order and method in the management of his school business. It is however open to objections from the severe duty it imposes on the teacher who is req^d during the summer months to conduct school from 10 till 6 in the evening with barely 2 hours interruption and although so much time is not req^d for literary instruction during the winter months still the number of children usually increases (as in most poor Houses) after harvest and the duty of the teacher is nearly as severe as in summer. The remedy for this would of course consist in appointing a suitable assistant to aid the principal teacher, but I fear the Guardians are not prepared to take any step of that kind.

With regard to the general proficiency of the children under instruction in the male school I am happy to be able to report very favorably; out of 57 boys present at my examination 40 or something more than two thirds were able to read with readiness and accuracy words of three syllables; and 14 or about 1 pupil out of every four wrote a fair legible hand: 10 Boys wrote a sentence (taken from 3rd Book) from dictation with tolerable correctness and about the same number answered fairly in arithmetic. Their knowledge of of Grammar and Geography was imperfect and superficial not from inattention (as I conceive) on the part of the Teacher, but simply from want of time to receive instruction in those useful branches.

Gills School:-

I have rarely visited a better conducted Poor Law Union Gills School. The reading of the Slogans (2) 3, 4 & 5 Classes was extremely good. The children seemed quiet and intelligent and when questioned on the meaning of their respective lessons their answers showed how well they understood what they had been reading. And if it be borne in mind that these classes comprise no less than 64 pupils and that the Teacher has never had any assistant to aid her, it will be at once understood how extremely painstaking and attentive she must have been to have brought about so satisfactory a result. But it would be an injustice to this teacher to omit calling Special Attention to her writings class, numbering 41 writing on paper and 54 on slates. Of those writing on paper fully one half had attained an excellent hand, and those not so finished promise soon to equal their more advanced School Companions. The Junior Class have also met with due attention and their proficiency in reading and Spelling is very satisfactory. The answering of 4th and 5th Class in Arithmetic, Grammar and Geography was far better than I expected and was certainly much above the answering in such branches given in most National Schools which have come under my notice.
